Cutting and Joining

Winnipeg writer and actress Marian Waldman tells how she adapted Gabrielle Roy's "Street of Riches" for presentation this Sunday on "Summer Stage"

Usually, in adapting a novel to radio drama, I have had a fairly straightforward job. It was, largely, a cutting job—a matter of deciding what is essential to leave in to tell the story, to clothe the characters, to bring life-in-sound to the atmosphere of the book.

In Street of Riches I was faced with a somewhat more complex task. In general, as is stated in the program notes on page 21, it is the story of a girl's early years on a street in St. Boniface . . . thickly populated by her interesting family and a few passers-by. The difficulty for the adapter arose in the manner of writing-organization: Gabrielle Roy wrote her book in chapters, each one almost completely devoted to the development of a different character. Thus, a chapter devoted to one sister, a chapter devoted to another—carrying us through to the end of her life, a chapter devoted to an aunt. And rarely do these people fully enter one another's story.

I could therefore approach the adaptation in one of two ways: I could follow the style of the novel, or I could attempt to make a more conventional radio play from it. The producer and I agreed that to do the former would be to create too episodic a form for sustained listener interest. When you read the book, you can finish with one chapter, pause, think about it, and when you have absorbed it as you wish, turn to the next page. In a one-hour show, which has to tell so much in so little time, the only pause you can have is a few seconds of music to bridge from one episode to another.

In choosing the second alternative, my job became one of taking all these separate stories and interweaving them to form one whole connected play. The cutter had to turn to tapestry-making.

I began, as always, by making a list of the events which would have to be left out, the events which might be left out, and the events which could not possibly be left out. I then made what I called a "chronology of climaxes," listing the time in the play when I thought each story should hit its high point. Then, working backward and struggling forward, I made my scene-plan. I had to keep the various characters developing side by side, yet be careful that the listener would not lose the threads of the narrative.

I had the usual terrible spells of suffering—for, if the book is beloved, the adapter bleeds with the author for what what must be left out. Some of the most delightful episodes and people had to be ignored, for they would take us on a tangent and we had no time for tangents. I sought to find an essential story line, to begin at the proper place (which, in the book, was actually p. 170!)—to end at the true resolution.

And one thing over which I pondered long and hard was the question—

When Gus Kristjanson took over drama production at CBC Winnipeg, TV had arrived, radio drama seemed mild and middle-aged, and many of its leading lights had gone east. Now a newspaper series, the revival of interest in a prairie author, and historical research is based on "Prairie Playhouse" scripts, thanks to

Mr. Kristjanson's Idea

NOW firmly stamped with a true western brand, Prairie Playhouse, CBC's weekly radio drama show from Winnipeg, has been steadily building a faithful and fascinated listening audience.

Since 1954 this weekly drama offering, one of the oldest shows originating from CBC Winnipeg, has been under the thoughtful guidance of producer Gustaf Kristjanson.

Gus first joined the CBC in 1948, shortly after graduating from Lorne Greene's Academy in Toronto, where he studied under a DVA grant. During the war he had served as a Lieutenant in the Royal Canadian Navy, and before the war he had taught high school in rural Saskatchewan, where he was born.

He doesn't remember just how his interest in drama originated, but neither can he recall a time when he wasn't secretly play-acting or dreaming of the stage, screen, and radio.

For a while, in 1946, Gus tried supporting his growing family from the hazardous earning of a freelance writer, broadcaster and actor. His early successes in Toronto were reasonably frequent, but the monthly bills were even more regular than the work.

Nevertheless, within that hectic free-lance year Gus managed the lead in an award-winning National Film Board production and wrote and narrated a children's series on the national radio network.

Still, when he was offered a job as script editor for the CBC in Toronto, the steady income was too tempting to refuse. So, for the next five years Gus pored over thousands of radio script submissions, encouraged, met and advised hundreds of fledgling authors, and taught radio writing at the Ryerson Institute and at his alma mater, the Lorne Greene Academy.

Looking back on those days, Gus now feels that this long stint in the CBC script department was excellent training for work in actual drama production. His next assignment, as radio drama producer in Winnipeg, seemed a most logical step.

Gus recalls vividly his first days at the Winnipeg studios. Television had recently burst forth on Winnipeg, and in the excitement all radio, and especially radio drama, seemed mild and middle-aged.

Winnipeg's radio drama production had, besides, lost much of its magnificent reputation of the past decade, during which many producers, writers and actors who had

Woodsmen and Artist

Colleagues, relatives and friends paint a "portrait from memory" of Canadian artist Tom Thomson

He was about six feet tall, he was lithe and he always had a stride through the city as if he was striding over a trail. He was a quiet, shy, reserved chap. He was never short with anyone. You see, people got the idea he was a little uncouth; the bush had made him a bit of a savage, but he actually was refined. He knew something about poetry and music; he used to play on the mandolin and accompany himself as he looked at his pictures. He was always concerned that you'd find your subject. He'd move off and leave you alone with all the things around you to make your own composition. You were looking for a subject, he wasn't. He was looking for a mood.

THIS description of Canadian painter Tom Thomson is by Dr. Arthur Lismer of the Montreal Museum of Fine Arts. Dr. Lismer, A. Y. Jackson and Lawren Harris, who were intimate friends of Thomson and who, after his death, became members of the famous Group of Seven, are among those who express their recollections of Thomson as woodsman and artist in a "Portrait from Memory" July 1 on CBC Wednesday Night.

The recorded voices of Thomson's colleagues, relatives and friends have been collected by Edward Devlin, who will produce and narrate the program. Primarily designed for transcription by the CBC's International Service, the program will be made available to English-speaking radio outlets abroad and in the United States.

Only a handful of people knew Thomson, and some of them are no longer living. "That has made the work of preparing this program particularly fascinating," says Producer Devlin. "Other famous people whose lives have been presented in this series, such as Leacock, Laurier, Osler and Agnes Macphail were of course known well by dozens of people. Thomson was known only to a small group of artists, forest rangers and the surviving members of his family."

Those who have contributed their memories, besides Lismer, Jackson and Harris of the Group of Seven, include an older brother, George Thomson, himself a painter living in Owen Sound, Ontario; a younger brother, Fraser Thomson, who lives in Toronto; Mrs. George Dodds, the daughter of Dr. James MacCallum, who was Tom's greatest sponsor and patron and whose collection of Tom's pictures was bequeathed to the National Gallery; Mark Robinson, who became chief ranger of Algonquin Park and whose memories were recorded a year before his death; and Pete Sauvé, a lumber camp cook who was a fishing companion of the artist.

To obtain Sauvé's reminiscences, Producer Devlin was directed to Camp Ahmek on Canoe Lake, where Sauvé had spent the summer of 1957 as chef, and thence to his home in Hull, Quebec. Before an Ottawa microphone he recorded his memories of Tom as fisherman and artist. He recalls Thomson's sketches on which he based The Log Drive and The West Wind.

"West Wind" by Tom Thomson.

Tom Thomson was born in 1877 in the Georgian Bay district and was brought up in the village of Leith. He began to paint seriously and effectively in the last five or six years of his life. He spent far more time in the woods and lakes of Algonquin Park than he did in the studio. In July, 1917, he was drowned under mysterious circumstances in Canoe Lake, Algonquin Park.

Thomson left about 30 large unfinished canvases and over 100 oil sketches. They hang, or are stored, in the National Gallery, the Toronto Art Gallery, the Montreal Museum of Fine Arts, and in private collections. His Jack Pine, West Wind, Northern River and Spring Ice are among the most familiar pictures painted in Canada.

The program was compiled with special advice and help from Miss Blodwen Davies of the Saskatchewan Arts Board, who has written the only book devoted to Thomson, and Dr. Arthur Lismer of the Montreal Museum of Fine Arts.

Mrs. George Dodds, in her memories of Tom Thomson, leaves us with a poignant glimpse of the artist whom she knew as a young girl: "He loved the rocks and the wind and the water so passionately that he got the very feel of the wind in his pictures."

The Rhythm Pals Are Real Pals

Things started for the Rhythm Pals back in North Dakota where a Mr. Wald and a Mr. Welk used to barnstorm around the state. After some years of this Mr. Wald took his family, including son Marc, up to Wilkie, Saskatchewan, while Mr. Welk went on to fame in show business as Lawrence Welk.

Young Marc Wald grew up in Wilkie, where his father kept on playing the piano and organ. Marc himself turned to playing the accordion, buying himself an instrument by selling newspapers. When he was 16 he joined and toured with the Sleepy and Swede band. "You got a dollar-eighty a week," he recalls, "and all the milk and bologna you could eat."

Next step came in 1939 in Saskatoon. Sleepy and Swede needed a bass fiddler, and a 15-year-old lad out of the local Junior Symphony applied. It was Mike Ferbey and, explains Marc, "His parents said he could go along if I looked after him." Marc and Mike toured with the band until they hit Vancouver. There they decided to stay.

The war took them travelling again, but separately. Then they crossed paths on a Vancouver street just after the end of the war, and they decided to team up once more.

Meanwhile hundreds of miles north of Vancouver, in Prince Rupert, a young man named Jack Jensen practiced his guitar while earning his living as a welder in the shipyards there. ("I got my guitar in 1936 and had one lesson," he recalls. "The rest I learned by listening to Wilf Carter records.")

By 1944 Jack had quit welding and shifted to Vancouver where he appeared regularly on private radio with his guitar. Hanging around the same station were Marc and Mike. One day someone suggested that they three have a workout together. And that started the West Coast's most popular western trio—The Rhythm Pals.

Since then they have had their own radio and television programs out of CBU Vancouver. They were among the first Canadians to appear on U.S. television (as guests of Spade Cooley); they've made recordings; and they've appeared with Marc's distant relative, Lawrence Welk.

Since moving East to Toronto a short time ago they have gained themselves a leading role in the daily Tommy Hunter Show on CBC radio (Monday through Friday) and now on TV's Swing Easy (Saturday nights) with singer Ruth Walker, Billy Richards' orchestra and emcee Alan Millar of Vancouver.

Although the Rhythm Pals have been best known for their western songs, they handle pops with equal skill. "In general, on Swing Easy," says producer Bob Jarvis, "we're after a simply presented but imaginative show with standard pops and novelty numbers.

Make-Up Tips From A Master

Irene Kalantarow became a make-up authority and cosmetic chemist because she couldn't stand the sight of blood. Originally this vivacious Caucasian intended to become a doctor, but after a year's study she knew she could never overcome her horror of blood enough to get through the course, and switched to another field which she finds just as fascinating and considerably less gory . . . the art of making people beautiful. But she learned other tricks, too, which could label her a dangerous person to have around, for she can also turn a beauty into a hag or a matinee idol into a Frankenstein in little more time that it takes to wink a false eyelash or wiggle a prosthetic ear.

In the pristine cleanliness of a CBC-TV make-up room in the Toronto studios she relaxed in a big blue barber-type chair and took a bird's-eye-view of her career. It began, she said, in a well-known Parisian medical clinic, where she won her certificate as a doctor's assistant for electrical and other treatments for skin care. There and in London and Glasgow she worked with dermatologists and plastic surgeons. "It was tremendously satisfying," she recalls, "to see the improvement in patients under our care . . . people with stubborn skin troubles seemed to blossom into different personalities when we helped them to acquire 'new faces'."

In Britain she branched out into theatrical make-up, and learned how to age people as well as make them look younger and more at-formed their early dramatic tastes in the small theatre groups of the depression were on the rising meteor of success. By the time Gus arrived in Winnipeg people like Tommy Tweed, Paul Kligman, Jean Tweed, Beth Lockerby and Neil Leroy—all of whom had been pouring their hearts out over the airwaves from Winnipeg during the eras of producers Esse Ljungh, Archie McCorkindale, Jim Kent, and Emrys Jones—had left for Toronto. A small nucleus of seasoned accomplished actors — people like Moray Sinclair, Jean Murray, George Secord, Bill Seller, George Waight, Marian Waldman, Helene Winston, Arch McDonell and Cec Montgomery — remained, but even so, Gus realized that it had become increasingly difficult to compete with the soaring world-famous standards of Toronto radio drama.

Gus also knew from his years of eastern experience that Winnipeg drama production standards could not be raised by the miracle of one producer's magic wand. What was needed was a forceful resurgence of supporting talent from a region which had already given so many famous names to Canadian drama. New writers were needed; new actors were needed; but above all a "basic idea"—a plan of action that would give meaning and purpose to the weekly drama shows — was needed.

Gus immediately set out on a wide talent search. In order to discover and develop talent he returned once again to teaching—an adult extension course in radio writing at the University of Manitoba, and radio acting classes at CBC.

Soon this first part of the plan was rolling down a smooth road, but the necessary working out of the "basic idea" required some rough travel.

"It took us well over a year," Gus admits, "before this 'idea' was firmly established. Looking back on it now it seems so simple that I wonder it wasn't immediately obvious.

"We knew it was pointless for us to try to compete with the major centres for scripts, or to try to better them in production standards. They had already collected some of the best people in Canada. So our only hope was to give our show its own unique character."

The "idea:" to present to Canada a dramatic radio picture of the Canadian prairies, past and present. And before long it began to work. Canadian prairie themes, in scripts by prairie authors, began filtering onto Gus' desk and were soon presented on the air. Often at his own suggestion radio adaptations of Canadian prairie novels were written. Historical plays, short-story adaptations, and plays with modern prairie settings soon became the hallmark of Prairie Playhouse.

The following few years of work were intensely exciting, and the rewards came quickly. In spite of the fact that some of the more experienced actors and actresses left for the big-time of Toronto (Helene Winston, Arch McDonell and Judy Sinclair are some of Prairie Playhouse's latest graduates), production standards were raised, new and exciting talent was developed, and the inevitable grand bloopers were forgotten.

Gus is now approaching the fifth anniversary of his experiment. The writings of such prairie authors as Frederick Philip Grove, Gabrielle Roy (see page 21), Sinclair Ross and Edward McCourt have been introduced to the listening audience. Original scripts by Marian Waldman (who also did many of the adaptations), Edward McCourt, Elsie Park Gowan, John Burke-Gaffney, and Mary Rogers Pattison, historical plays by Mort Forer, and adaptations by Ben Lepkin and others have formed the recent basis for Gus' radio drama productions from Winnipeg.

And the blossom of the old "basic idea" is finally bearing fruit. A series of articles now being planned in a western newspaper was inspired by an original Prairie Playhouse production; the great revival of interest in Grove's novels

Two For Physics

Professors Donald Ivey and Patterson Hume, of the University of Toronto, present a new series about the science of physics. (See story opposite page).

Starting this week—

Two For Physics

A new Tuesday night series on CBC-TV, with Doctors Donald Ivey and Patterson Hume of the University of Toronto

EARLY IN THIS century physicists saw the universe as a huge system of material bodies, all moving on predestined courses according to immutable laws. The general laws were known; only the size and complexity of the universe prevented omniscience.

Today the story is very different. The physicist cannot tell you the future of even the smallest particle of matter since it acts haphazardly, at random. He cannot even fully describe such a particle because his measuring instruments constantly intrude on the situation he is trying to measure, as if he tried to measure the distance between two piles of iron filings with a magnetized ruler.

More than this, the physicist of today is using concepts he does not fully understand to explain a microcosm of whose existence he is doubtful. This, of course, is an exaggeration, but the paradox contains an important element of truth. Perhaps it can be stated as follows:

With the Renaissance the physical sciences burst into activity. Scientists used their eyes and ears as well as their reason to observe nature and generalize about her ways. Men like Galileo not only observed; they learnt how to experiment. And as the new experimental sciences grew, mathematics grew with them and provided a universal language in which scientific hypotheses could be expressed and enlarged.

Into the scientists' orderly system came the atom; not the speculative atom of the Greeks but a new and powerful concept based on observation and experiment which enabled scientists to predict the behaviour of matter and thereby to control it.

The earliest model of this atom suggested a lump of dough (a positively charged substance) with raisins studded through it (the negative electrons). Then a physicist found by experiment that he could shoot particles right through an atom without disturbing it. This suggested an atom with space in it, and the next model gave the atom a positively charged massive nucleus with electrons revolving round it like a miniature solar system. More experiments gave a new model; this one a nucleus as before but with a series of shells round it, each shell with a maximum capacity for electrons.

Thus far, we find nothing to conflict with our common sense. The layman is vague as to just what these positively and negatively charged particles might be, but the models themselves seem quite understandable. However, more experiments forced physicists to introduce the new notion of waves surrounding the nucleus rather than particles encircling it. But we must not think of these waves as made up of electrons, as drops of water make up an ocean wave. The electron is the wave, and if we ask the physicist what the wave is in, as the ocean wave is in the water, he will not answer the question. He can describe the wave mathematically, and this mathematical description is all he needs to pursue

Poet MacLeish On "Close-Up"

Archibald MacLeish, American poet and former Director for the Office of Facts and Figures, appears on Close-Up this Wednesday on CBC-TV.

MacLeish was born in 1892 but, he says, did not start living till 1923 when he threw up security to take his wife and family to France. There he began earning a living by writing poetry. Prior to 1923 he had attended Harvard Law School—"mainly to avoid going to work"—and practiced law for three years, with an interval in the artillery at the front during the First Great War.

After his return from France he lived on a farm and wrote a volume of poetry a year. At first he wrote highly subjective poetry but later introduced social and economic themes. His interest in politics took him into the inner circle of President Roosevelt's bright young men and Roosevelt appointed him Librarian of Congress, a post he held until 1944. The appointment caused considerable controversy, partly by those who thought a librarian should be trained as a librarian and not as a poet, partly by those who saw every Roosevelt appointment as something to be attacked.

Since the war he has been active in UNESCO, written a number of radio and television works and at present has, on Broadway, the controversial play J.B., a modern drama based on the Book of Job.

had its beginnings in Prairie Playhouse presentations; and more recently travelling researchers, preparing material on various aspects of prairie history have been interviewing local radio writers who have researched the same field for Prairie Playhouse scripts.

Gus admits all this is a good sign, but, as with any art, radio drama must grow to survive. Gus' interest now is in further plays, especially on current prairie problems and experimental plays using new methods of acting, writing and production. As always, Gus is on a continual search for fresh, interesting and exciting acting and writing talent.

Sammy Davis, Jr.

his physics. If we cannot translate the mathematical description into ordinary language, this does not affect its validity in the theory of physics.

Outside of his laboratory, of course, the scientist might be very interested indeed in the philosophic interpretation of his scientific concepts. Thus we find Max Born writing a book on the Philosophy of Cause and Chance. And Einstein, confronted by the principle that the movement of a particle is random, unaffected in principle by any general laws, can speculate that this is a passing phase of physics and say that he does not believe in "a dice-playing God."

To return to the theme: can we expect to translate the mathematical formulas of modern physics into ordinary language.

Some philosophers say no. And the violence which the notions of physics seem to do to common sense has led them to deny the reality of the so-called ultimate particles (at least in the sense that tables and chairs are real); they are but "hypothetical entities," useful devices with which scientists correlate certain observable phenomena, even though those hypothetical entities have no corresponding reality. In this way they try to bypass the problem of how scientists can talk about entities which are apparently quite outside the experience of their senses.

Other philosophers, however, say there is no real problem here other than our reluctance to give up traditional ways of thought. We persist in thinking in terms of classical physics in a completely new situation, they say, and hence find the new concepts most puzzling. But a man brought up in mediaeval ways of thought must have had exactly the same difficulties in thinking and speaking about what has come to be classical physics. In time, many of the notions of classical physics—gravitation, for instance—have become imbedded in our thinking and in our language. Perhaps too the new and puzzling notions of quantum physics and relativity will also become part of our way of looking at the universe.

To help achieve this is, in part, the motivation for the new program, Two for Physics. Doctors Donald Ivey and Patterson Hume will discuss, with illustrations and experiments, some of the concepts of physics from its experimental beginnings to the present day.

STREET OF RICHES

tion of how much I had a right to add of my own. In an adaptation, you have to add a certain amount of material; of course, you make dialogue from narrative, change dialogue to narrative, write in speeches to bridge gaps. You try to make these additions as unobtrusive as possible, as indistinguishable as possible from the author's style. With Street of Riches, I felt that Roy's prose was beautiful and moving and that it might be presumptuous of me to add more than absolutely necessary to keep the story straight. Yet I had, also, a responsibility to the listener; and in the end, to unify the story, and hold together all the threads, I had to preface the play with some explanatory narration about the Street of Riches itself, and what the jewels were on the street, so that I could refer to these jewels from time to time as I stitched away on my literary sewing machine.

When I had it all done I read and timed it and found I had to cut about eighteen minutes of script. I had suggestions and sympathy from the producer . . . but this is the real pain, when characters, atmosphere, precious bits of thought have to be snipped out to lie cold and dead and never-to-be-heard on the unfeeling floor.

You never know until you hear it, afterwards, whether you have captured this whole book in your brief hour on the air . . . and most authors, afterwards, are too polite to tell you what they really think of you and your hacked-up effort.

But if Gabrielle Roy forbears, the adapter will nevertheless weep for every missing word.

Stu's Lingo

• I have just been listening to the Stu Davis Show. Here are a few examples of Davis' choice of words: "kinda nice," "real good," "a whole lot." He never pronounced the final "g" in a word ending in "ing". He used "jist" instead of "just" and "yuh" instead of "you". There was not one sentence in the whole 15 minutes which was enunciated properly. How can you justify such a program? I am unduly sensitive prehaps because I am a secondary school teacher concerned in part with English grammar and composition. Why deliberately expose Canadians to something so obviously in bad taste? CBC diction is usually superb.—Miss E. J. B., Ot-tawa.

Stu does not talk this way off the air. The speech used on his program is in keeping with the popularly accepted western cowboy "idiom."

* * *

Distant Viewers

• I picked up your station clearly between 4:30-5:00 p.m. CST. The program was Father Knows Best. I've been picking up a few other Canadian stations such as CKCK-TV, Regina.—Carroll Littlefield, Friona, Texas.

• Your picture and sound received here Friday night. The show was Talent Caravan and I enjoyed it very much.—Maurice C. Nute, Jr., Rock-land, Maine.

• Would you please send me an acknowledgment card proving my reception of Pieces of Eight on Thursday, June 11 at 3:30 MST.—D. Brown, Libby, Montana.

Summer Shows

• For a while the TV schedule was quite good, but the summer replacements are just terrible, especially the Dave King Show. Every week those girls have on less. It is said that girls dress to express themselves, but these have very little to express.—An Ardent TV Watcher, Steinbach, Man.

Country Humour

• I am a constant listener to the program Four's Company, and enjoy it immensely. Two weeks ago on the program devoted to country humour a poem was read entitled The Passing of the Backhouse. It would be appreciated if you could advise us where this work might be procured.—Mrs. J. Tureski, Glenboro, Man.

This is one of many similar requests we have received. The poem, believed to have been written by John Greenleaf Whittier, is included in "American Ballads: Naughty, Ribald and Classic," a Red Seal paperback published by Fawcett Publications, New York.

Tempo and Weather

• Please stop this Tempo nonsense. This was a cheap U.S. gimmick copied by every low-powered, commercial, record-playing station to compel listeners (by concealing the times at which non-commercial programs could be heard) to listen to the commercials. The introduction of such an out-of-date fraud on the public by the CBC is indefensible. Also transpose Continental Carousel to your Trans-Canada Network and forget about Ask the Weatherman. There is enough news of the weather on radio without it. No one listens to a program about such a transitory matter.—A. P., Regina.

Regarding "Tempo," since it does not contain any commercials, the program is not trying to "compel" anyone to listen to them, and the times of the programs within "Tempo" are not "concealed". They are in the CBC Times radio listings. We understand that "Ask the Weatherman" is a much-listened-to program across the country.

Comparisons

• I was extremely interested in Comparisons tonight. It is all too seldom that such controversial opinions are allowed to be expressed in our ultra-conservative society. If this program has punctured the complacency of the mass of relaxed humanity sitting hypnotized in front of their television sets, as I gather it was intended to do, there will be a storm of angry protests, a flood of indignant letters and telephone calls. This is all to the good and will prove the success of this excellent program. Please continue with programs of equal calibre, despite the inevitable criticisms.—Sylvia J. Douglas, St. James, Man.

MUSIC ON RADIO

by FRANK HAWORTH of Toronto

WITH the seasonal departure from the scene of the symphony orchestra and other large-scale aggregations, the emphasis now is on the smaller, more intimate forms of music-making — on the solo recital, and on chamber music, as it is still called, although the gilded salons of the aristocracy, its original setting, whence the name was derived, are now hardly even memories; and chamber music today is performed in much the same kind of surroundings as any other. The word has largely lost its meaning, except as a convenient label—if, indeed, it ever did evoke quite the sense of intimacy we have come to associate with it. Some of the “chambers” of the socially elite of bygone days seem to have been as large as many a smaller modern concert hall. However, as we sit in our own minute “chambers,” listening to broadcasts of trio and quartet, and enjoying their still-characteristic flavours, we can feel, perhaps, a pleasant sense of continuity with the past, since these, unlike the larger organizations, have changed but little with the passing of the years.

One curious relic, which may or may not enhance this feeling for us, is Adalbert Gyrowetz's Diversissement for piano, flute and cello, to be played respectively by John Newmark, Mario Duschenes and Walter Joachim in Sunday's Chamber Music Concert. Gyrowetz flourished about 150 years ago. For a time he certainly flourished; with his symphonies (60 of them), church, theatre and chamber music, he was acclaimed throughout Europe. But alas! The word went round that he was a mere imitator of Haydn, and he went the way of all imitators, dying eventually in poverty and obscurity. That, at any rate, was the contemporary judgment of him; but opinions change, and our verdict on Sunday may be different.

In her Sunday morning recital of English songs, Belda Boroditsky, soprano, accompanied by John Newmark, is to include two by 18th century Thomas Arne, another composer regarded with somewhat mixed feelings by his contemporaries, and known to posterity chiefly for “Rule Britannia.” His fame has endured better than that of Gyrowetz; his songs in particular, and notably his Shakespearean settings, have qualities of both content and idiom that have kept them green. The recital also includes songs by Purcell, Bax, Walton and Delius.

Winnipeg's Western Artists concert on Monday night features the violin playing of Frederick Grinke, a native of that city, trained and long resident in England, where his fame is considerable. (Listeners will doubtless remember his outstanding performance with the CBC Symphony Orchestra last season.) With Chester Duncan at the piano, he is to give, among other things, the first Canadian performance of Gordon Jacob's Sonatina. The work of this English composer is of great interest, displaying as it does a blending of “modern” techniques and traditional methods in a way that may well indicate the trend of future development of the art.

Items . . . In her song recital on Wednesday evening Maureen Forrester includes the lovely “Bist du bei mir” of Bach, for which he also wrote the words, and Schumann's Liederkreis . . . An unusual sort of item in Friday evening's Concert Hall is a concerto for two cellos by Couperin, played by Walter Joachim and Lotte Brott, with Kelsey Jones at the harpsichord.

Alexander Graham Bell

First subject in a new “Portraits From Memory” series on Tuesdays

He was superbly eccentric, superbly sane, warm-hearted and charming—though people were not really necessary to him—and even in his old age had more vitality and enthusiasm than the average boy. He was a bit of a showman but scorned sham. He was never bored and never boring. He wouldn't accept other people's conclusions or do things other people's way, and out of his lifelong, passionate devotion to scientific truth came the telephone, when he was only 27.

Britain, Canada and the United States all claim him as a son. The truth is that he was born in Edinburgh in 1847, came to Brantford, Ontario, for his health in 1870, and lived there while he was experimenting with his telephone apparatus. Later he moved to the States, became an American citizen, and for the last 37 years of his life spent his summers in the bracing atmosphere of Baddeck, Nova Scotia, where he built a large summer home and laboratory. He was a familiar sight in the district, a tall figure with flowing white beard, bushy white hair under a tam o' shanter, striding about in homespun knickerbockers and Norfolk jacket, directing his experiments in flight, sheep breeding, speed-boat racing, etc.

Alexander Graham Bell is the first of five outstanding Canadians featured in Portraits from Memory, a radio program series produced by Edward Devlin of the CBC International Service. It begins Tuesday morning on the Trans-Canada network. Other Canadians to be spotlighted are Sir William

SUMMER STAGE

"Street of Riches," Gabrielle Roy's novel adapted for radio by Marian Waldman, and produced in the CBC's Winnipeg studios by Gus Kristjanson, with original music composed and conducted by Eric Wild.

This is the story of Christine—"Petite Mesere" ("Little Mysery"), a frail, sensitive child who grew up on an uncrowded street in St. Boniface. The youngest of eight in a French-Canadian family whose mother was "a creature of the day" and to whose father only night was bearable, Christine spent her childhood hesitating between day and night. Her forest of memories brings us glimpses of the fascinating life on Rue Deschambault:

of Odette, who played Rachmaninoff and became a nun; of "the Italian" who brought a foreign sun to the prairie street; of asthmatic Aunt Theresina who finally arrived in California by way of Gravelbourg, North Battleford, Edmonton and Vancouver; of Christine's Dutch suitor, Wilhelm, who wooed her by playing "Thais" on his violin via telephone and of the frogs—"the voice of the pools" which in the end whispered to Petite Misere the way she was to go.

Of "Street of Riches" Gabrielle Roy herself says, "Much of it does indeed run parallel to my own life
... but naturally I have transposed my remembrances (already transposed by the passing of years) and perhaps—I hope I have succeeded—transfigured them."

tractive. She also had a large international private clientele, many of whom still keep in touch with her.
"Before the coronation of Elizabeth II I spent the gayest night of my life," she remembers. "I worked right through till dawn, making up Coronation guests many of whom had to be in the Abbey very early in the morning. I'm sure some of them slept with their make-up on!"

Then, on the Queen's last visit to Canada, Mrs. Kalantarow spent what she considers the most exciting 20 minutes of her life, applying Her Majesty's television make-up for a CBC-TV appearance. "I had so little time to do it," she says, "but the Queen was charming about it, and I think she found it rather fun. She really does have the gorgeous English complexion you hear about, and uses very little make-up for ordinary occasions. I had made up many people she knew in Britain, and we chatted about them as I hurriedly worked with my TV kit. After her telecast the Queen waited to thank me." Many viewers commented on how natural Her Majesty looked on the screen. Mrs. Kalantarow will also be in charge of the Queen's make-up for CBC-TV appearances on her Canadian visit this summer.

If you've wondered who has to wear make-up on TV, the answer is everyone—except perhaps, some lucky devil with a healthy tan, although if he has a bald head he must have its shine toned down a little, tan or not. TV make-up has a yellowish cast which makes it unsuitable for street wear, in addi-

TRANS-CANADA MATINEE

Border Revels. Last week, two neighbourly nations celebrated their birthdays. In two cities where the neighbours are next-door to each other, the celebrations extended to both sides of the border for a week. Nancy Battagello, the CBC's morning commentator in Windsor, reports on the Detroit-Windsor Freedom Festival that was really a bang-up birthday party.

Here Comes the Bride. Princess Indira is a well-known commentator for the British Broadcasting Corporation. Her sister, also a princess, was married in India not long ago to an Indian airforce officer. In this last of Matinee's series on wedding customs in other countries, Princess Indira interviews her sister about her marriage and records the actual wedding ceremony.

Daily Features . . . Winnipeg-born soprano Maxine Miller will offer some songs, and there will be a reading from Robert Louis Stevenson's "Travels with a Donkey."

Curtain Up For A Playwright. A writer of plays seeing one of his own works produced on the stage always has two causes for concern; one that the actors should do well, the other, that his play should appear as he had envisioned it.

Elsie Park Gowan, one of Canada's busiest playwrights, recently had a third worry when one of her plays was staged, for it was being done by patients at the Alberta hospital for the mentally ill. She needn't have worried—on any count—and the experience was a rewarding one, as she reports in this Matinee talk.

A Wilderness Rancher

Some time ago a gigantic cattle drive hit the headlines when it followed the Fraser River away up to Quesnel and into Prince George in the northern reaches of British Columbia. Some of the animals on that drive, the longest in North America, belonged to Pan Phillips of Home Ranch below Williams Lake, in a valley stretching wide between mountain chains along the old Cariboo Trail.

It's a wild, beautiful region, at the back of beyond, about a mile high, quite open, and well irrigated. Twenty years ago Pan Phillips left the Oklahoma Panhandle and trekked north. He and a partner (whom he later bought out) settled in the northern B.C. wilderness and experienced hardships, excitement and danger that would make the hardy pioneers of a century or even two centuries ago look over their shoulders. Today, although Phillips has civilized his immediate living area, built a large log bungalow and now ranches about 5,000 acres with two or three times that area leased from the Government for grazing, he is still as far from 20th-century living as he ever was—50 miles on pack-horse from the nearest neighbour and supply post.

Recently Canadian freelance writer and broadcaster Lyn Harrington and her husband Richard, the well-known photographer, spent several weeks on the ranch with Phillips, who is around 50, his wife, Betty, and their children: boys aged 14 and 3, and a girl of 12. Lyn took along a tape-recorder and captured an unusual sound picture of their pioneer life, which Summer Fallow presents on Monday night on CBC Trans-Canada.

Producer Mike Bevan describes it as "one of the finest documentaries of its kind, with actual sound of how pioneers live today and how they had to live 50 years (Please turn to page 31)

Bawdy Books

A study of ribaldry in literature on "Voices of the Past"

"A taste for dirty stories may be said to be inherent in the human animal." That was Irish novelist George Moore, explaining, perhaps, why he wrote Esther Waters (1894), which certainly isn't on any Sunday school list, though whether it should be classed today as a filthy story is widely debated. But he wasn't the first, or the last, to write a suggestive book. The furore that arose recently over the publication of Lolita was nothing new. Ever since man learned to put his thoughts in written form, there have been violent controversies over what constitutes off-colour material, or even tattle-tale grey, in story-telling. And, of course, no one knows what Rabelaisian tales went round by word of mouth before the invention of the printing press, or who objected to them! The definition of ribald has had a strange career.

On Tuesday night on CBC Trans-Canada the new summer series Voices of the Past will take a look at the situation. It's prepared and presented by Canadian novelist and broadcaster Ronald Hambleton, with the aid of various actors. Each week he selects an interesting topic and ransacks the literary world for entertaining comments on it. This week you'll hear what various writers, balanced and unbalanced, have had to say about bawdy books, from the ancient Greeks up to the present.

This edition of the show isn't for children, obviously, but it will not force delicate adult ears to run for cover, either. No risque quotes will pollute the airways. Rather, Mr. Hambleton will take both serious and humorous looks at the purple passages of past and present, at the people who wrote them, and at what critics thought about both writer and writing. He'll refer to Esther Waters, to Henry Fielding's Tom Jones, Richardson's Pamela, to Sappho and poets like her who were free in their description of love and sexual feelings. He'll be assisted by a small group of Toronto performers, including Alan King and John Bethune.

we do a lot of research, and many actors and actresses have told us how much more confident they felt in the authentic faces and hair styles we gave them."

Pressed for some of her make-up secrets Mrs. Kalantarow said most of them are too complicated for use in private life, but here are a few of her tips for home make-up . . . Use a darker make-up base on a double chin, heavy jowls, droopy eyelids, bags under the eyes, or any features you don't want spotlighted. Those depressing lines down from the nose or mouth should have a lighter shade applied to them. Edges should be blended carefully, and then the normal make-up finish applied over all. Mrs. Kalantarow emphasizes that this shading should be done very delicately, to avoid a hard effect. In fact, all make-up should be applied to enhance the wearer without making it obvious—no one should look like a caricature of herself! As we grow older, eye and mouth muscles are inclined to sag, so eye and lip-liners should carry the natural lines up at the corners, to give a more youthful effect. Mrs. Kalantarow says she can't over-emphasize the importance of massage for keeping muscles firm. "With all the inexpensive beauty products on the market these days, no woman need look plain. And when massage and creams fail, there's always plastic surgery!"

POST-NEWS TALK

Wing Commander Freddie Latham of the Institute of Aviation Medicine at Farnborough, England, talks about cosmic rays. "If atoms were as big as bullets," he says, "sitting in space would be like sitting in a field with machine guns firing wildly all around you." Although cosmic rays may have played a part in the evolution of man in past ages, it is only because we may meet them in space travel that we now consider them important. Tonight Wing Commander Latham discusses the behaviour of cosmic rays and what may be their effect on the earth and its inhabitants.

tion to the fact that most people consider it a little too elaborate for private life. Women performers wear eye-liner, mascara, sometimes false eyelashes, enough pencil to define their eyebrows well without making them overpowering, lipstick, and a special kind of water-soluble pancake all over their face and neck. On CBC Wednesday Night

“The Shoemaker’s Holiday”

The Shoemaker's Holiday, Thomas Dekker's play about a young gentleman who disguises himself as a Dutch shoemaker in order to win the hand of a daughter of the Lord Mayor of London, will be presented this week on CBC Wednesday Night from Vancouver.

The play, which has been adapted by George Woodcock and will be produced by Gerald Newman, was written in 1599, when Dekker (sometimes written Decker), English dramatist and pamphleteer, was about 27.

Dekker is believed to have lived from around 1572 to about 1632. In collaboration with Ben Jonson he wrote plays for the English theatre manager Philip Henslowe as early as 1598. But by 1601, when Dekker had quarrelled with his fellow-dramatist, he answered a vitriolic attack by Jonson in The Poetaster with an equally brilliant satire called Satiromastix, or The Untrussing of the Humorous Poet.

It was during this period that Dekker wrote some of his best work, including The Honest Whore (written in collaboration with Thomas Middleton), If It Be Not Good the Devil Is In It, and Old Fortunatus.

Among the most famous pamphlets by Dekker were The Wonderful Year (1605), a description of London during the plague, and Gull's Hornbrook (1609), which satirizes the dandies of his day.

In his staged introduction to The Shoemaker's Holiday, Dekker places his thoughts in the character of The Proclaimer, who says:

“Take all good in good worth that is well intended, for nothing is

PORTRAIT FROM MEMORY

Osler, Sir Wilfrid Laurier, Agnes Macphail, and Stephen Leacock.

Bell's character and work will be pictured through the memories of his two daughters, one of his granddaughters, older people who were children when he was developing the telephone in Brantford, and others who worked with him in his later years in Canada. Many of the memories in this portrait were recorded by the older people in Baddeck, who speak in the soft, musical accents they have inherited from the Scottish Highlands.

Listeners will learn about the Bells' home life in Baddeck from family servants, about the first flight in the British Empire from the man who piloted the plane (J. A. D. McCurdy), and about the later experiments with speedboats from Bell's chief boat builder.

The program includes a reproduction of the sound of the world's first long-distance telephone call in August, 1876, from Paris, Ontario, to Brantford. It is recorded on the Bell Telephone Company's replica of Bell's original membrane-telephone.

Bell left Brantford to continue his great work of teaching speech to the deaf in the United States, and to lecture on vocal physiology. A particularly revealing episode, recalled by his daughter, is his meeting with the famous blind and deaf woman, Helen Keller, when she was a child. Bell married Miss Mabel Hubbard of Boston, who had been deaf since childhood, and pursued his work in medicine, eugenics and electrical science in Boston and Washington. But he spent many months of each year with his family in Nova Scotia.

The July 14 portrait is of Sir William Osler, one of the most influential, most respected medical figures in the English-speaking world. His personality and work will be recalled by his contemporaries, one of whom, Dr. Wilder Penfield, director of the Montreal Neurological Institute, says of Sir William: "He devoted his mind to the study of clinical problems, to teaching, and the lore of medical history. In all of these fields he was a leader. And yet it is not altogether because of these qualities of the intellect that Osler became a hero of medicine, a source of Canadian pride, like Sir Frederick Banting. The unique quality of Osler had to do with the heart."

Sir Wilfrid Laurier will be featured on July 21. The program isn't a formal biography of Canada's first internationally-recognized statesman, but rather a sketch of his career and achievements, based on selected memories of surviving contemporaries, with a linking narrative written by Professor John T. Saywell of the department of history at the University of Toronto. Passages from his speeches and letters will be read by well-known French-Canadian actor François Lavigne.

Agnes Macphail, champion of the underdog and first woman to be elected to the Canadian House of Commons, is the heroine of a July 28 profile written and narrated by Anne Francis, Ottawa journalist who followed Miss Macphail's career for many years, and admired her humour, salty tongue, and fight for the things she believed in. Miss Macphail fought for many causes in which the welfare of people and the principles of justice were uppermost. These included the rights of farmers, rural education, prison reform (which brought her world-wide recognition) and world peace. Among those taking part in the program are her sisters, her private secretary, old friends and associates in public life.

Stephen Leacock's working habits, enjoyment and favourite stories are recalled by his friends and family on August 4. Former students remember the popularity of his lectures, his niece describes family life in Montreal and at Orillia, the country town where he spent his summers, and which was the model for one of his funniest books, Sunshine Sketches of a Little Town. A distinguished younger contemporary, Gladstone Murray, talks about a billiard game in London at which Leacock tried out his definition of humour on English author G. K. Chesterton. The program ends with Leacock's own voice reading one of his pieces, taken from a recording made late in his life.

I, for one, simply don't believe the "theatre-in-the-raw" boys and girls have a monopoly of the true version of contemporary society. I'm looking forward to them maturing and, as Shaw put it, writing their "plays pleasant."—John Thompson, a dramatic critic, speaking in the BBC's General Overseas Service.

SUMMER FALLOW

ago." Lyn illustrates what they do on the ranch, what is expected of the children, how they entertain themselves, and how they react to various emergencies. Listeners will meet their friends, including an Indian Chief who dropped in for a visit one day.

Although the valley knows the tang of wood smoke, the clean sound of a hand-saw, harness bells and the gay cries of children at play, it is still a wilderness. Recently Betty Pan, with the assistance of a merchant at Annaheim Lake, put through the only road in the area which, says Lyn, "might be good two or three days of the year." To reach the ranch she had to ride horseback for two days over the Itcha Mountains on this rocky, swampy trail winding through the bush and over the ranges. But it's the one vital link with the outside world, used mostly by cowboys and Indians going to the Annaheim Stampede.

Although the region is isolated, the Phillips and others receive messages fairly often from friends by radio, do most of their shopping by mail, and the children get their education by both radio and mail. It takes four days to make a trip to the nearest store by buckboard. Phillips has everything and everybody on the ranch organized to make up for lack of facilities and equipment. With no doctors available they concentrate heavily on keeping well, and never take chances.

Recently the two older children made their first trip "outside"—to the stampede. This experience, says Lyn, left the boy "mixed up inside," and he wasn't sure whether he wanted to go back to the ranch or not. The girl, a proficient horsewoman, and already an authority on cattle grading, had no doubts. Ranching suits her fine, just as it does her parents, who have spent the roughest and happiest years of their lives on this backwoods homestead.

Men collectively, if they will allow human sympathy to extend beyond the narrow bounds of creed or colour are capable of contributing to each other's happiness, and not only to terror and death. Why should we use knowledge to destroy each other? It can equally be used to bring happiness to all. The darker our world becomes, the more imperative is our duty to keep hope alive, to hold before the weary spirit of man a shining vision of populations freed from ancient excess of toil and from the modern nightmare of fear, developing what is splendid in human faculty, in knowledge, in the creation of beauty and in the emotions of friendship in which happy societies can flourish.—Bertrand Russell, on the BBC's General Overseas Service.
